IN MEMORIAM

In memory of the late Mrs. Archie A. LeGrande, who departed this life, January 8, 1953.

Softly the stars are gleaming
Upon a precious grave,
Where sleeping without dreaming
One we loved but could not save.

She bid no one a farewell
She said good-bye to none.
Her loving heart has ceased to beat
Before we knew she had gone.

Time may heal the broken-hearted
Years may make the world less sore,
But it can not fill the longing,
For the love one gone before.

Who shall say the grief is lessened,
Though the smile may hide the tears;
Memories keep the wound still open.
Despite the passing of the years.
—Sadly missed by:
Husband and Children.

VA. FARMS IMPROVED FOR UPLAND GAME

Virginia farms embracing 1,242,233 acres were improved for upland game in 1954 through plantings of materials furnished free by the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries. A total of 4,896 individual landowners cooperated in these plantings on their own places.

This means that habitat improvement for game was undertaken in 1954 alone on approximately one-twelfth of all the farm lands in the state. The Agricultural Census of 1953 shows that there were 16,115,280 acres in all the lands in farms. Cropland harvested was 3,647,272 acres, and the vast majority of the plantings for game are made in connection with normal practices on farms that are producing field crops.

While there is still a long way to go, the statewide program of habitat improvement for upland game on privately owned lands, launched under the Commission's long-range program in 1948, is gaining ground steadily. Four years ago lands benefitting from game plantings were only one-half the figure for 1954 and the number of individuals cooperating was fewer than one-half. There were only 2,295 in 1950.

In virtually every case in which farmers interested enough in his game to go to the trouble of planting, he did many other practical things of benefit to game and other forms of wildlife. Inducing landowners to leave food and cover and treat game as a crop is an important part of the overall program.

Plantings for game are normally made in one-eighth-acre field borders or feed patches. The seeds and plants furnished by the Commission in 1954 were sufficient to set out 23,000 such establishments. Of these, 15,000 were in plantings of annuals, while 8,000 were in plantings of the perennial lespedezas.

It is impossible to estimate the extent of the benefits of past years of the perennials which, under favorable circumstances, increase in value to wildlife over a period of years. The total of lands being permanently benefitted for game through the plantings of the perennials is building up all the time.

Most of the plantings for game on privately-owned lands are made with the active cooperation of the Soil Conservation Districts, which blanket the state. They map the farms of their members and recommend plantings for game as a regular part of planned farming. Much of the planting material is furnished to the Soil Conservation technicians who instruct the farmers how, and when and where to plant.

Many of the plantings for game especially when the perennial shrub lespedezas are used, are of great value to landowners in checking erosion. The recommended field borders save money and labor in obviating the necessity of cultivating the strips next to woods which are so thin that they will not bring crops. Gullies are brought back to fertility.

In the tragic droughts that Virginia has suffered of late, the game plantings have been affected, along with the plantings of everything else. But there will be no let-up in the program of improving habitat for game, with the hope that ultimately a vast majority of all farmers will take the wildlife into account and make conscious effort to improve game habitat on their land.

The figures cited above do not include the plantings made in the National and State Forests, which are extensive, nor do they include the special demonstration areas created by Game Commission personnel as a means of demonstrating to the public the practical aspects of creating better food and cover conditions for game.

An important objective in the habitat improvement program is educational in the sense that more and more farmers are being induced to treat their wildlife as an important product of their lands. Increasing numbers of individuals are realizing that there can be far greater overall abundance of various types of game in the state if simple things are done for the improvement of the waste areas.

Macadam Highway Comes to Iconium

Modern Turkey has macadamized the 160-mile highway from Ankara, capital of the republic, down across the high plateau of southwest central Anatolia to Iconium, the city in which Thecla met the Apostle Paul.

The beautiful legend of St. Paul and St. Thecla is perhaps better known to adherents of the eastern church than it is to the laity of the west. According to the apochryphal "Acta Pauli et Theclae" of the 2nd century, Thecla was a noblewoman of Iconium who was so inspired by the sermons of Paul that she, too, became a preacher of Christianity.

Like Paul, she was persecuted for her belief. Roman masters of Asia Minor tried to burn her at the stake. Miraculous rains quenched the flames. She was thrown to wild beasts in the arena. A lioness licked her hand, then guarded her against the other animals.

Thus spared in Christianity, Thecla labored in the work of Christian missions until her death at Seleucia. She is now revered by the eastern church as an "Apostle to the protomartyr among women."

Iconium, now known as Konya, was old in St. Thecla's day. Myrians Hittites, whose inscriptions record their history back to 2000 B.C., had a city on the site. Magogols, Aryan Phrygians, Persians, the Greeks of Alexander the Great and the legions of Rome held sway over Iconium in their turn.

Dwarfism in Cattle Is Serious Problem

Dwarfism in cattle is becoming a serious problem to range cattlemen. Until quite recently, dwarfism was mostly a problem in improved purebred herds. But, as these herds began providing range bulls, it was inevitable that the condition known as "dwarfism" become prevalent in range cattle.

Tests indicate that in some herds seven out of 10 range bulls are carriers of dwarfism. This is bound to result in severe losses to rangecattlemen. A national effort is underway to control dwarfism.

Dwarfism can be eliminated, at least theoretically, through the use of a device called a profilometer. The instrument sketches a mature bull's head revealing the bluge in the mid-forehead bones if the animal is a dwarf carrier. When such bulls are mated to carrier cows, the offspring will be dwarf calves. Large scales tests on this device are being conducted in an effort to stop dwarfism before it starts.

The Honeymoon Is Over

Driving along a highway near Fort Wayne, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. James Gibson of that city were having one of those sprightly little chats husbands and wives sometimes have about the husband's driving habits. Mrs. Gibson ended the discussion by throwing the car keys out the car window. Mr. Gibson slammed on the brakes, and two cars following him piled up in a three-car collision. Gibson was charged with reckless driving. The driver of the second car was charged with operating a car without a license. His companion, owner of the car, was accused of permitting an unlicensed driver to operate the car. The driver of the third car was charged with improper car registration. The charge was placed against Mrs. Gibson, who had merely thrown the keys out the window.

Brush Care

Brushes which have been used in oil base paints or varnishes may be left suspended in linseed oil for a limited time, but the oil will gradually thicken and become difficult to remove. The safest procedure is to clean the brush at the end of each painting session. Any bristle brush can be readily cleaned, while it is still soft, with the proper thinner for the product in which it has been used. Use turpentine, followed by naphtha or mineral spirits, for oil base finishes such as paint, enamel or varnish. Use alcohol for shellac or alcohol stain. Lacquer thinner is called for in the case of lacquers. Preferably it should be a lacquer thinner made by the same manufacturer who made the lacquer in which the brush was used. Use water for calcimine, emulsion and other water-thinned paints.

Under the Chestnut Tree

Overfire air jets, now popular in furnaces and boilers, are based on the principle recognized by the old-time blacksmith who forced a stream of air into his fuel bed to produce a hotter fire and less smoke.

Cool Sleeping

Like cool sleeping? You can wear a short gown which buttons down in front, fashioned in cotton seersucker or nylon; two piece short pajamas, or one piece short pajamas shirred and elasticized at the midriff.

Too-Easy Reading

There is danger in trying to teach a child to read too early. About half of the children in a class having an average age of six and a half years will normally lack the eye coordination needed for reading.

A LIVE WEEKLY NEWSPAPER AT HISTORIC APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE VIRGINIA

VOLUME 62 NUMBER 2 APPOMATTOX, VIRGINIA THURSDAY JANUARY 13, 1955 Subscription Rate: $2 Per Year

Father Darkleaf

By c. h. r.

If you will pardon me, I would like to shed a few tears.

January is by tradition, March of Dimes month. A few years ago I did a column during January on a visit to Warm Springs, Georgia. I related the events of a full day at the summer cottage there of the late FDR and a polio victim. I shed tears then, too, as I put into feeble words the emotions of a grass roots citizen in witnessing the precious things in the summer cottage of a man who made a gallant fight against polio. You have to go to Warm Springs; with your own eyes see the crutches, the canes and wheel chairs, to realize the great heart a polio victim must have.

But that was some years ago, and today I want to write another column for the March of Dimes. Just to keep the record up to date.

Al Hastings died last week. I want to write about him, and the gallant heart he had.

He died at 3:15 A. M. January 7th, in Northampton-Accomack Memorial Hospital, Nassawaddox, Va. He was 53.

But there is more to the story than that. Listen:-

Al was born in Oriole, Maryland, son of the late John and Ella Hastings. The family soon moved to Nassawaddox, on the Eastern Shore of Virginia. When the little boy was two years old, he was a polio victim. The family was given the sad news—for the rest of his mortal life, little Al would be a hopeless cripple. He might possibly learn to move about on crutches. But there was no hope of an ordinary life.

The family settled in nearby Cape Charles. Somehow, Al got to and from school and finished his formal education in 1920. [illegible] help me, a miracle happened. Paul Mallard and Charles Turner were publishing the Eastern Shore News at Cape Charles, and they became interested in this amazing lad, who for whatever it took to fight a handicap. They suggested that he try to learn to operate a Linotype machine. It was love at first sight. The Liontype is one of the most complicated of all the machines of our machine age. Skill, patience and other virtues are required. The record is that within an unbelievably short time, Al Hastings could operate a Linotype machine nobody's business. And in 1924, when the Eastern Shore News moved up to Onancock, Va., Al Hastings went along as part of the deal. There is where I met him, and we worked together on this newspaper in Onancock, in the late 1920's. I was as green as they come. It was pitiful. But it did not take me long to find out that there was "a strong man" in the back shop: Al Hastings — I never saw a fellow with such a fine attitude toward his job. I recall that when the presses started rolling and the papers came off the line, Al was always the first one to grab a mailing machine and lay on labels. He put genuine love for his job into his work. It was an honor to be "on the team" with Al.

I left that newspaper in 1931, and came to Appomattox. Part of the inspiration was: If Al could lick his handicap of crippling polio, then I could fight a thing like the Depression.

It was only a few years later that I read some terrible news. My old friend, Al Hastings had been in an automobile accident. The year was 1935, the date May 18. And Al lost an arm: amputated near the shoulder.

There was no doubt then.

Al Hastings would have to give up! No being on earth could overcome that!

In the hospital, Al said, reports a mutual friend: "Well, I guess the jig is up!" This friend says that Al turned his face to the wall, and whispered, "I have done my best, but I guess now I'll never be able to work again."

Eight months later, Al Hastings hobbled around on the old newspaper machine. The "Boss" suggested that he just drop by when he could, and just "tinker" around with his old machine. He even held out that Al might earn some pay by helping to "keep the machine in shape."

So help me, it was not long before Al Hastings was in there operating his machine, full time, again. He came to Betsy, a cripple, and just one hand: but he mastered it! To overcome two great tragedies: polio and then amputation.

I never saw Al again. But I did

'54 Traffic Toll Tentatively Set At 807 Deaths

Richmond, Jan. 12.- Colonel C. W. Woodson, Jr., Superintendent of State Police and Executive Chairman of the Governor's Highway Safety Committee, today set 807 as the tentative figure for Virginia's 1954 traffic deaths. There remains the possibility, he said, of some slight upward revision due to very late reports or deaths of persons now carried in an injured status.

The drop in deaths marks the third straight year of improvement despite a rise of 15 per cent in traffic volumes during the period. In 1951, there were 999 deaths, in 1952, 960, and in 1953, 905. Other improvements include a lowering in pedestrian deaths of from 225 in 1953 to 160 last year to mark the lowest pedestrian kill recorded since the inauguration of complete records in 1953. Deaths of servicemen fell from 96 to 62.

Noting that, while rural deaths were down from 762 to 666, urban deaths dropped only from 142 to 140, Colonel Woodson stated, "Had we been able to have shown a corresponding improvement in our cities, we would have had a far more substantial reduction." He attributed this saving of lives to the stringent laws, including those permitting the use of radar, enacted by the 1952 and 1954 General Assemblies and to a generally improved public attitude which, he said, "is apparently beginning to reflect the intensive program of education and has been carried out in the traffic-safety field."

Six counties, Amelia, Giles, Highland, Middlesex, Lunenburg, and Surry, experienced no fatalities, while Fairfax was high with 32. Nansemond saw 25, Norfolk County 24, while Princess Anne and Prince William had 21 each. For the larger cities, Hampton led with 19, Richmond and Warwick saw 18 each and Norfolk 12.

Colonel Woodson's final advice was that the public consider the reduction only as a very favorable trend and not a battle won. "There is little or no room for congratulating ourselves on ONLY 807 traffic dead," he said.

It can be used on sidewalks as well as streets.
